Summer of Hope 2025, Hutchcraft Frontline Report #6 - From Darkness to Light: Hope in Southtown

Southtown isn't like any other place we've been this summer. Native people from 40 different tribal nations live there, jammed into a few blocks in a major city. It's not hard to understand the violence and addiction and even death that is "normal" living there. The average annual income - $10,000 a year. Half the population is 18 or under. It seems as if there's always been a recent funeral. David, our Native host, has lived the street life before Jesus dramatically transformed his life. Now he's raising his family there because of God's call - and he's pouring out his life for the people of Southtown. He told the On Eagles' Wings team: "There's a blanket of darkness over this community. Life here is traumatizing. I look at the pictures on the youth center wall of young men and women I've worked with here." His voice trailed off as he said, "So many are in prison. Or they've died." The wall of one building displays a mural with names and dates scrawled all around it - remembering the missing and murdered Native women from this community.

On Night 2 and Night 3, [of a missionary outreach] we experienced the answers to the passionate prayers of the team and of God's people around the world - peace in the park. Hope in the park. On Eagles' Wings warriors wearing matching green shirts were in spiritual conversations all over the park. Some locals walked away. Some were seriously considering Christ. And some were choosing Christ as Savior!
